

ROBERT B. PARKER'S SPENSER

Told in gritty, spare prose, this Boston-based hardboiled crime series stars Spenser (no first name), a tough, well-educated private detective who lives by a personal code. Possessed of a dark sense of humor and unafraid of a little trouble, Spenser, occasionally assisted by his friend Hawk, a former French Foreign Legionnaire, takes on cases deserving of extra-legal justice.

ROBERT B. PARKER

Robert B. Parker (1932-2010) has long been acknowledged as the dean of American crime fiction. Born and raised in Massachusetts, Parker attended Colby College in Maine, served with the Army in Korea, and then completed a Ph.D. in English at Boston University.

Parker began writing his Spenser novels in 1971 while teaching at Boston's Northeastern University. This mystery series featuring the wise-cracking, street-smart Boston private-eye Spenser earned him a devoted following and a place in the canon of mystery fiction. R.W.B. Lewis, writing in the New York Times Book Review commented "We are witnessing one of the great series in the history of the American detective story".

In addition to his Spenser series, Parker has also written several standalone novels, two additional mystery series, and a western series.

Parker died on January 19, 2010, at the age of 77.

ROBERT B. PARKER'S SUNNY RANDALL

Sunny Randall is well-connected in both Boston's law community (because she's an ex-cop, now a P.I.) and in Boston's underworld (because the ex-husband she's walked out on is a mob scion running some legitimate bars started with dirty money). She's also great with weapons and wisecracks.
